

This is a most common scenery can be seen in the evening and morning time. Most of the villages sufficient of milk because of the farmers like these. The small cowsheds available at least five or six families inside the village. Normally farmers release or tie their cows to the nearest bare land to feed them, again in the evening driven them to shed. Cow dung is very very important for the farmers to their cultivation as manure. Additional milk, they collected in the morning, sell to outside and rest is used for other milk products like curd & cheese.
